

Basketball Memories in April

We are pleased to welcome Mr. Phil Judson to our speaker's podium in April. He was part of the 1952 Illinois State Basketball Championship team. Why is that unique? Read on.

Alden-Hebron High School is the smallest school to win the Illinois High School Boys Basketball Championship. In 1952, with a high school enrollment of 98 students out of a town population of 650, the boys team won the state title with an overtime victory over Quincy. At the time, all Illinois schools competed for a single championship, regardless of enrollment. The town's water tower is painted to look like a basketball in commemoration of the event.

For those in the area who had never heard of the Sweet Sixteen Tournament or didn't know the difference between a grapefruit and a basketball, little Hebron was put on the map by a high school basketball team that wore green and white and called themselves the Green Giants. On March 22, 1952 the Green Giants headed downstate to the University of Illinois at Urbanana-Champaign to play in the championship game against Quincy High School, which hailed from a town of 44,000 people. That day, Phil Judson, his twin brother Paul, Bill Schulz, Ken Spooner and the late Don Wilbrandt started to play against Quincy. The starting lineup was never relieved and played the entire game. On that day, Coach Ahearn's team edged Quincy 64-59 in overtime, bringing the state title, and the beginning of a legend, to the smallest school in the 45 years of the tournament. The victory was watched on television and listened to on radio by more than a million fans.

Norway in Netflix

Our boss, Lowell Olberg, made note last month of a couple of online shows that may be interesting to our members. The first is "Occupied" a 10 part fictional story about Russia occupying Norway because of Norway's plan to curb oil drilling. This occupation is bloodless but there is some terrorism on the part of Norwegian Citizens. The second show is a 6 part series titled "The Heavy Water War" about the WWII Norwegian Resistance movement in Rjukan stopping the heavy water production. These are both in Norwegian with English subtitles, but easy to watch; both a quality modern production. A fee to Netflix is required to view.
